Lyndon Group, an accounting, finance, IT and governance professional services firm specializing in high-level project-based engagements, has expanded its specializations to accommodate the needs of its growing client base.

The company marked its 8th anniversary in September by building on its existing services, adding forensic accounting and further developing its ethics and compliance practices.

Lawrence Varone, project manager for Lyndon Group, will head the new forensic accounting services focus on fraud detection through the use of investigative accounting techniques.

Lyndon Group professionals will work with its legal partners to perform internal accounting controls evaluation, cash flow analysis and inventory costing analysis to uncover deviations in accounting processes and/or to verify that acceptable practices were adhered to during the preparation of all financial statements.

“Businesses today are committing to higher standards of corporate governance and ethical business practices, making this a dynamic time for accounting and financing professionals,” says Kenneth Jones, CPA, founder and executive managing director of Lyndon Group.

“Integrating forensic accounting practices with our ethics and compliance services will allow us to go beyond traditional roles as accountants and offer the highest level of assurance for our clients.”
